RESOLUTION OF PERCEIVED CHALLENGE OF RECOVERY AND FUNCTION RELATIONSHIP: AND THE WOUNDED FAMILY: A STUDY IN

In the next section we examine in greater detail a family's experience of the 1989 Wright Report (Keris, 1989). There are other studies which consider the impact of psychological factors on the process of rehabilitation. The study of St. John's Hospital by the Royal British Legion, for example, shows the importance of psychological factors. It also highlights the need for families to be involved in the rehabilitation process.

The report concludes that the impact of psychological factors on the process of rehabilitation is significant. It also suggests that families need to be involved in the process to ensure that the patient's needs are met.

The report also highlights the importance of families in the

CONCLUSIONS

Ultimately, the combination of loss and bereavement is central to appreciating the complexity of the human condition. In expecting too different outcomes from bereavement, we risk overlooking the ability to feel secure in relationships and grow from these experiences. The ongoing relationship may evolve over time, with the survivor often finding new ways to engage with life and others.
